Babacar is a young power forward with a large wingspan and great athletic ability with a great future ahead of him.

Although his best position is at the 4, he can also play as a small forward improving his outside shooting and as a 5 thanks to his physical conditions and high defensive level. He is a player who plays above the rim as he is very long and stands out for his high mobility.

Defensively he is a very interesting player for any team as he can defend guards and centers. He has long arms and he is aggressive and strong on the ball. He makes good use of his long legs to make quick defensive movements. This ability to switch on blocks is a highly sought after asset these days and one that he can exploit.

Thanks to his long arms he is able to grab many offensive rebounds per game. And the ones he doesn't manage to grab, he touches them to get second options or to abort counterattacks from quick opponents. He is excellent at defensive rebounding, as he has assimilated very good rebound blocking concepts. He doesn't wait for the ball to touch the rim to start blocking, but starts this movement as soon as the ball leaves the shooter's hands.

Sow attacks the rim very often, and is capable of finishing from close range or with dunks. He can threaten from long range and from the corners as he has good mechanics and fluidity. In addition, he draws a lot of fouls on his opponents and has progressed in the free throw shooting aspect to become a reliable shooter from the 4.60m line.

In addition to all this, he has great timing for blocking and instinct for defending close to the rim. All this makes him, in addition to his good communication and intuition for rebounds, a very good rim protector.

In short, Babacar is a very young player, with a great desire to improve and a great capacity for sacrifice thanks to which he is progressing a lot in all aspects of the game year after year.
