Moustapha is one of the most intense young players in African competitions.

His natural position is point guard, where he stands out for his electricity and, above all, his organisational skills. Technically he is a very gifted player with good hands under pressure. He is also capable of having a very good shot selection, highlighting his good two-point shot on the bounce.

What he stands out the most is on his defence and intensity on the court, as well as his ability to distribute assists to centers and shooters. In the videos you can see that he is very technically gifted. It is very difficult to find players who can defend with such intensity all game long and that is very important for any coach because he brings a lot of attitude on the court. Mboup is used to defending opposing guard stars. In addition, his intelligence (IQ) allows him to anticipate in many defensive actions which makes him steal a lot of balls and cause turnovers from his opponents.

In short, Mboup is a team player who has spent years training and playing with the best players of his generation in Senegal (such as Khalifa Diop and Ibou Badji).

Moustapha is a clear example of professionalism. He works every day on his physique, takes care of his diet, takes great care of himself to be in perfect condition and is an example for the rest of his teammates in terms of dedication and hunger.

But what I can highlight the most about Moustapha is that he is a good person and a great teammate, which is why he was chosen as captain of his national team. He is a leader on and off the court for his teammates.
